

An Introduction to Technical Writing

A three-evening seminar/workshop
Instructor: Michael Bremer

Technical writing is a growing field. As technology has left the laboratory and entered our homes and offices, the need for writers who can clearly explain complex subjects to everyday people is growing.

You don't need a technical degree—just the ability to learn new things and explain them to others. In fact, more than ever, the field of technical writing needs writers who are creative, entertaining and even humorous. Technical writers earn good money, and there are opportunities for salaried positions and contract work. Is it for you? Come to this one-evening seminar and find out. Bring pencil and paper or a laptop and be prepared to write, to be edited and to rewrite.

Where: Pleasant Hill Education Center, 3100 Oak Park Blvd., Pleasant Hill, CA 94523, Room 304.

When: Three evenings, Tues. Jan. 1, 15 and 22, 7:00 to 10:00 PM. (course #208214)

Class Cost: $50.00

About the Instructor: Michael Bremer has been active in technical writing for 13 years, 10 of which he spent at Maxis (the SimCity® company), where he wrote, edited and managed the writing group. Two of his books, UnTechnical Writing—How to Write About Technical Subjects and Products So Anyone Can Understand, and The User Manual Manual—How to Research, Write, Test, Edit and Produce a Software Manual are currently being used as college-level textbooks.
